Restructuring of COBOL/CICS Legacy Systems - Sellink, Sneed, Verhoef (1999)   Self-citation (Sneed) (Correct)

....[25] Apparently, the problem is so intricate that [25] proposes to use a dedicated processor (the Personal 370 adapter card) in order to run mainframe applications without a change on PCs. In this way off loading is fast and thus cost2 effective [25] On the other hand, the authors of [39] indicate that off loading is a very difficult problem. Needless to say that reengineering CICS applications is a difficult problem. This paper deals with the intricate problem of restructuring COBOL CICS systems where the exception handling is eliminated, the processing logic is structured, the ....

....the SECTION level from the original source text where they are performed in line and their replacement by subprograms which are called dynamically at run time. This repartitioning has the advantage of making the CICS programs much smaller, more flexible, more testable and more easier to maintain [39]. A repartitioned program is of course much smaller because only the CICS commands and the control logic are left in the main program. The processing routines are removed to separate modules. Such programs are more flexible because it is now possible to change the transaction control without ....
